This paper presents the question of the authorship of the ten extant Divine Offices that mention the name of Gregory. After an overview of existing opinion on whether St. Gregory the Theologian is really the author of the liturgy, the paper asserts the opinion that it's difficult to speak about the authorship of early divine offices since they were subject to so many revisions.
Nevertheless, it's possible to say that the author of certain divine offices is in fact the compiler of the Eucharistic prayer.
